About

Henry loves turning ideas into reality. Although he didn't know it at the time, his career started when he was a 20-year-old student at Texas A&M. Henry asked his friends to give up every beverage except water for 10 days, and to donate the money saved to help dig clean water wells for communities in need. In 2010, he convinced Living Water International to create a job for him so he could take the 10 Days model to other campuses around the country. In the past four years, the 10 Days movement has reached thousands of students at more than 25 universities and raised nearly $400,000.

In the last two years, Henry has used his production, design, and marketing skills for other clients as well. He played a key role in branding and marketing Riot Studio's feature film Believe Me, including serving as producer of all behind the scenes content.

In January, Henry founded Embassy Creative, a full-service marketing and advertising agency rooted in the belief that the best way to expand a brand is by turning fans into ambassadors.

Henry has an amazing way of leading teams right where they need to be. Throughout working with him at Embassy I was consistently impressed by his ability to see a need and implement a solution that takes care of it for the client.
