The Shark Tank Success Daymond John Says Will Disrupt the $55B Garden Industry

LEAD INVESTOR

Xavier Helgesen Founder, Enduring Ventures (a cash flow-focused holding company). Co-Founder, Better World Books ($70 Million+ e-commerce company)

Seedsheet has everything you could want in a growing business. It has a patented product that is loved by its growing community of gardeners. It has GREAT margins: some of the best I have seen in e-commerce. And it has a giant market: over $40 billion spent annually on gardening. I have had the privilege of watching the team get stronger and stronger over the past two years. The operations have gotten ready for scale, some serious industry pros have been recruited, and the company's site keeps getting easier to use and more focused on its best products. I'm excited for everyone to be a part of this company's story in the next phase.

Our Team

Cam MacKugler Founder, VP Product

Acclaimed developer of disruptive consumer products. Former VP of Sustainability at Breadloaf, LEED Architect. His inventions have been featured in Popular Science, Fast Company, Fortune, and many more.

I've always LOVED gardening. I learned how to do it as a child with my grandparents, and I do it with my own children today. But some parts of gardening suck! I hate pulling weeds, and no one likes spraying nasty chemicals on their food. With Seedsheet I can make my favorite hobby easier and healthier for families like mine all over the world.

Rob Kennedy CEO

Proven experience leading teams and growing successful businesses, 2 corporate exits. Previously VP Business Development at Socialcam (Acq. by Autodesk), the fastest app ever to reach 1M downloads in the app store, grew to 70M users in 2 yrs.

Why Seedsheet?

The advertisement features a green background with a stylized plant logo at the top left. The logo consists of a green stem with three leaves, and the word "seedsheet" is written in a bold, lowercase, sans-serif font below it. To the right of the logo is a circular inset image showing a hand holding a freshly harvested carrot from a garden. Below the logo, the text reads "We make gardening ridiculously easy". Further down, a mission statement is presented: "We're on a mission to become the ultimate backyard brand, to empower everyone to grow their own food, and convert their backyard into their own personal supermarket." On the left side of the graphic, there is a product shot of a "custom raised bed garden" bag, which is decorated with various vegetable icons. At the bottom of the graphic, four logos are displayed: "SHARK TANK", "FORTUNE", "Better Homes and Gardens", and "POPULAR SCIENCE".

We're on a mission to become the ultimate backyard brand, to empower everyone to grow their own food, and convert their backyard into their own personal supermarket.

Gardening is our passion, and what could be more fulfilling than helping people grow their own food?

Gardening doesn't have to be difficult, we make it easy!

Message from Cam MacKugler, Founder

When I was growing up, I spent my summers working for my grandfather. As a kid it would be odd jobs around his house and garden, and in high school I was splitting firewood from the land he bought, and building houses on that land to eventually sell to his new neighbors. The man was an entrepreneurial legend, the embodiment of stoicism, and the tenacity and drive that he imparted on me as a kid still burns in me today.

In high school I pursued cross country ski racing, an obscure sport for most of the country, but a ubiquitous part of winter in Vermont. Due in no small part to the unending hours spent splitting firewood, I became a national champion, 7-time All-American, was recruited to a Division-I college, and raced for the US Ski Team... I split a LOT of firewood...

In college I fell in love with sustainable architecture, similarly inherited from my time spent building houses for my grandfather. I minored in Environmental Studies, and after graduating, I worked for an architecture firm focusing on sustainable design. I drafted blueprints of growing roofs, and vegetated walls, and incorporated plants into nearly every building.

One summer I house-sat for a co-worker, and because it was Vermont, the house was actually a fully functioning 80-acre dairy farm, replete with cows, chickens, and a majestic garden. I'd spend my days drafting blueprints, and my evenings harvesting dinner from the backyard. One night, as I picked kale for a salad, I noticed the meticulous rows of plants, and I had my epiphany: 'Why aren't there blueprints for plants!?'

Gardening demystified.

There's nothing better than walking to your backyard to harvest fresh herbs, pluck a ripe tomato, or relax with your morning coffee or evening cocktail.

Growing food is an exciting, and incredibly rewarding experience. We're here to make it as enjoyable as possible.

I sketched the first iteration of Seedsheet in my co-worker's farmhouse with his kids' crayons. It combined architectural CAD precision with my grandfather's method of transplanting seedlings into holes cut in an old rug. Six months, and several prototypes later, I launched our first Kickstarter campaign. Another six months later we were on Home Depot shelves. Shortly after that we did a deal on Shark Tank, sold out on QVC and Good Morning America, and have been growing ever since.

It hasn't been an easy road, but ever since I was a young kid swinging axes, hammers, and ski poles, I've learned that perseverance and drive can really make anything attainable. Seedsheet has evolved and grown, through national television exposure, Covid-spurred demand, Covid-obliterated supply chains, and through each opportunity and challenge we've come out the other side stronger and smarter.
