Noelle London

CEO + Founder, Illoominus | Techstars '22
Atlanta, Georgia, United States

Summary

Noelle is the CEO and Founder of Illoominus which helps companies proactively manage their diversity commitments and retain and grow diverse employees into leadership positions.

Most recently, Noelle launched and ran the Accenture Ventures US-South program and her team was charged with leading joint go-to-market opportunities with Accenture's priority startup partners and the Accenture Ventures investment portfolio helping startups scale into Fortune 2000 clients to solve problems quickly, cost effectively, and testing the latest in emerging technology.

Noelle has been working with early and growth stage startups for over a decade known for helping bridge connections to capital, customers, and talent. She led the startup economic development strategy for the Atlanta Mayor's Office launching DE+I programs to connect underrepresented tech talent with career paths to some of Atlanta's top startups. Before moving to Atlanta, she was with 1776, a startup and global incubator and seed fund, where she launched the Crystal City incubator to attract tech talent to the area as well as the Marriott-Accenture Travel Experience Incubator to test new business concepts with startups. Her entrepreneurial journey started from a young age with a jewelry business and ever since she worked as a Peace Corps volunteer in Nicaragua for 2.5 years with female founders, she was hooked. Over the years, she's been immersed in and helped entrepreneurs grow their companies in roles across startups, public sector, corporate, academic, and nonprofits.

Noelle earned a Masters in Global Policy focused on Economic Development and Technology from UT Austin and has an undergraduate degree from the College of Charleston in Economics and Latin American studies.
